MAY 2010

New challenges for a new decade

We are just getting started in this new decade to chart the course for Public Broadcasting in the Rio Grande Valley. We believe in the value that Public Broadcasting brings to our community. The question is how can we increase our value to the community. We are in the stages of some great ideas that we plan to put into action.

Our founder Bishop Fitzpatrick made the initial investment in our company because he believed that we could make a difference in the lives of many members of our community. It was his belief that through educational broadcasting we could improve the many aspects of the lives of our community. It was his compassion for the people of the valley that leads the path for us today.

This is a time of renaissance in public broadcasting, with the ability of multicasting which gives us greater avenues of opportunity to make a difference in our community. Broadcasting alone is not enough. We must begin through our broadcasting operations to be a catalyst for positive improvements in our community.

We are very grateful and thank you sincerely for your support over these many years. For those who have yet to support us, we ask you for the opportunity to demonstrate that we deserve your support. We are very grateful to the Diocese of Brownsville for their continued support of public broadcasting in the Rio Grand Valley. We hope that many of you will join us in our mission to serve the people of the valley.

Your source for a variety of music, news and local information is Public Radio 88FM!

Ready To Learn

What Kids Need to be Strong Readers

http://rtlp.org/site/readers/needtoread_01.shtml

Learning to read is a process that starts when a baby is born. Moms and dads and grandparents and big brothers and sisters and other adults are important people in that process because they talk to the baby and play with the baby. When babies and toddlers and preschoolers hear words and stories, they begin to understand how language works. That helps them become good readers when they get bigger.

Letter Knowledge

In 2000, a group of researchers and teachers called The National Reading Panel finished a report that helps parents and teachers understand what kids need to become strong readers. Here is some of what they found: Kids need to know the letters of the alphabet. This is called letter knowledge.

FUN IDEA: Play «I Spy» in the car, on the bus, at the grocery store. Pick a letter and see if you can find something shaped like that letter. «Can you find the letter M?» «S», «T», «V», «C», «O», «E», and «H» are easy ones to start with. Then move on to harder letters to find.

Phonological Sensitivity

Kids need to know that letters make sounds and that those sounds form words. This is known as phonological sensitivity.

FUN IDEA: Play «Sound it out.» You can do this anywhere—at home, in the Laundromat, in the grocery store and lots of other places where there are signs or labels. Look at a word together with your child. Use your finger and point to the letters. Make the sound of the letter and let your child have fun practicing the same sound. Then say the sounds together so she can see how the sounds make a word she knows.

Print Awareness

Before they become readers, kids need to understand how print works. For example, when you read, you go from left to right and from top to bottom. You look at the print, not the white space. You start a book at the beginning. You use different formats for different things, like a story might be in a book, but a restaurant menu is often on one or both sides of a page. Understanding things like these is called print awareness.

FUN IDEA: Play «Which Way Does It Go?» Pick something that has letters (like blocks) or words (maybe a soup can or a box of laundry detergent) Put the object on its side and help your child figure out which way it goes. Pictures will give him some clues. Help him see that the letters he already knows have a top and a bottom and if he turns it over, it doesn't look like the same letter anymore.

Reading Comprehension

To be a good reader, it's not enough to know words. Children need to understand what words and sentences mean. This is called reading comprehension.

FUN IDEA: Play «You Tell Me.» After you tell a story or read a book to your child, ask her what happened. Encourage her to tell the story back to you in her own words. Let her have fun with it. If you see that she didn't understand something, do not scold her or make fun of her. Instead, try to figure out what words she didn't understand and explain them to her. Let your children use their imaginations to make up other stories, just for fun.

Remember to praise your child and give him a big hug after you play word games. Even if she didn't understand everything, she is learning. Kids need to feel good about reading and hear you say good things about what they know how to do. It makes them want to get better at it. If you only point out mistakes, they may begin to feel that word games and reading are not fun. One of the best thing you can do to help your child become a good reader is to help them like reading!
